The Cambridge Arts Council, the city’s lead arts agency, presented the first city-wide Cambridge Open Studios (COS) this past spring. Hundreds of artists working in all media throughout Cambridge opened their doors to the public over three weekends in April and May. This program is a collaboration of the Cambridge Arts Council (CAC) and neighborhood open studio groups, Cambridgeport Artists Open Studios (CAOS) and North Cambridge All Arts Open Studios (NoCA), in addition to artists and arts organizations throughout the city. The Arts Council plans to make this city-wide Cambridge Open Studios an annual event each spring.

“Considering this year was the first time that Cambridge launched a city-wide Open Studios, we were very flattered to be invited to exhibit at Logan Airport, which was used by more than 26 million passengers last year. This exhibition gives Cambridge visual artists and Cambridge Open Studios an expanded local, national and international audience. We are very pleased to collaborate with Massport to introduce the many people who walk through Logan’s terminals to the talented artists in every neighborhood of Cambridge,” said Jason Weeks, Executive Director of the Cambridge Arts Council.

Massport has been exhibiting artwork at Boston Logan Airport since 2001. In addition to rotating exhibitions, the airport is home to many permanent artworks including the work of Cambridge-based artist Mela Lyman, who was commissioned to paint the interior frieze at the Water Shuttle Terminal. The purpose of the Logan Public Art Program is to host exhibitions that provide a calming influence in the airport environment while supporting local artists and institutions.

“Massport is proud to support the Cambridge Open Studio artists with an exhibition that gives them a wider audience. The artwork is also a wonderful way to welcome the thousands of people who travel through our airport each day,” said Ed Freni, Director of Aviation at Boston Logan International Airport.
